Bethlehem Steel To Be Completed Late Summer

Nearing completion for occupancy late this summer, new fabricated structural steel facilities for Bethlehem Pacific in Torrance are receiving final touches of steel erection crews.

The new Fabricating Works is located on a 46-acre tract of land and will have more than three acres under roof.

Record Time
Speed of developing the new property has been cited by company officials as representative of the economy of time realized with the use of steel frame construction.

The new works will be occupied almost one year to the month from the time the project was given its original approval.

Located immediately west of Western avenue on 190th street, Bethlehem Pacific's new Torrance fabricating works will offer greater capacity than the present fabricating facility on Central avenue in South Los Angeles.

The new works represents an investment of approximately four million dollars.

Personnel
Fred C. Todd Jr. will transfer his duties as works manager to the new installation as will R. W. Binder, chief engineer of fabricated structural steel construction for Bethlehem Pacific.

ANTHONY'S ADVENTURES

So many people have been asking about our food to go that this week's column is going to be almost strictly commercial. Don't read any farther if you don't want to—'cause I'm warning you, the rest of this is an advertisement.

- Here's Anthony's food to go:
- *Pizza, all kinds.
 - *Spaghetti, with sauce and parmesan cheese.
 - *Meat balls.
 - *Sweet Italian sausage links.
 - *Lasagna.
 - *Ravioli.
 - *Salad, plain or with antipasto.
 - *Tortedo sandwich.
 - *Meat ball sandwich.
 - *Sausage sandwich.
 - *Garlic and cheese bread.

I'm sorry to say, but we have no hamburgers, hot dogs, tacos, enchiladas or barbecued ribs—next week I'll tell you where I think the best places to get these foods are located.

Please forgive the commercial. Bye-bye.
